

Mr. Vladimir Zakharov, Director, Institute of Sustainable Development, member of Russian Federation Civic Chamber

Abstract

Strengthening a broad sustainable development movement is a key issue to provide a success of the process at global, regional and national levels, a priority for the state and business support. It assumes creation a forum of all three sectors including state, business and public with particular references to the civil society involvement including mass public organizations and expert sustainable development institutions, broad public awareness and incentives, incorporation of sustainable development goals in the general social and economic strategies and action plans, regional and national adaptation of sustainable development agenda and indicators.

Economic and social councils and similar institutions, their global and regional associations as well as their institutions, such as EESC, Sustainable Development Observatory and European Advisory Councils and Institutes for Sustainable Development, could be among the main actors for the process.